But many did not believe; and because of this many believed and were baptized, but they were confessing in their hearts that they had no hope and believed only on the mercy of God. Elsawin 4 1 Keygen 16 jamdea. On the latest edition of "E-Town," Headlines & Brews, Way Too Early contributor Gregg Easterbrook offered up a critique of

ESPN's NFL Nation video, calling out the national site for their misconstruing of a conference call with NFL commissioner Roger Goodell. Goodell, who is on a conference call with the league's owners and the NFLPA, was asked whether the 2012 season might be viewed as a success if the New England Patriots or the New Orleans Saints get to the Super Bowl. After the league's public relations people arranged the NFL Nation call, Goodell answered in the affirmative:

"You know what? If these teams get to the Super Bowl, and it's two teams that are great franchises in their markets, but they have a chance to win it with some young men that are good football players and they're able to win a Super Bowl, then I think you'd have to call it a success in my mind." The theme of the call was that while the league had been good about moving the game to Thursday night, it was the ongoing salary cap constrictions that had hurt the league's "elder statesmen."

Easterbrook, in his critique, contrasted the league's coyness with the ESPN newsroom, which very clearly offered up Goodell's quote for all to see in their videos: Now the problem is all of you would say you'd never get away with quoting Goodell like that in any newsroom in the country, but where it becomes a problem is when the commissioners of a conference call are making a statement about a game. There's a specific context and a set of rules that you set in your newsroom that's supposed to govern how you deal with things and how you treat people in those settings. I don't think that's a fair thing to criticize ESPN for, but instead of just conceding that what they did was dumb, they go on a 16-minute diatribe trying to reframe it as something else. The commissioner was trying to be coy. He was simply saying it, and they tried to reframe it
